Youth join in and get talking

The first meeting to bring together young people from four local government areas – Camden, Campbelltown, Wollondilly and Wingecarribee – was held in Campbelltown this month.

Twenty youth from the four councils' youth advisory groups, plus local organisations Youth Solutions and Macarthur Diversity Services, were represented at the youth advisory meeting at Campbelltown Arts Centre. Addressing them was Travis Collins, who last year was the president of NSW Youth Advisory Council. Each group spoke about their areas.

"We broke down barriers of where people come from and they learnt a lot about each other and the issues of each area," said Cath Brennan of Sector Connect, which is working on the Youth Sector Development Project.

"If any young people want to be involved in planning activities, [they can] call their council and speak to their youth development officer."
